BRUSSELS (Reuters) - Belgian state prosecutors on Wednesday charged a man with terrorism for planning an attack on the European Commission and a gas station in Brussels, the EU's home town where people were killed in twin attacks in March. A car is seen in front of the EU Commission headquarters in Brussels, Belgium February 24, 2016. REUTERS/Yves Herman The man, identified only by his initials F.J.W., was arrested in Belgium a month before the Brussels attacks, the office of the federal prosecutor in Brussels said in a statement. He was also accused of preparing a similar attack in the city of Antwerp on the same day as the attacks in Brussels. Police conducted a raid in the northeast city of Dendermonde after being tipped off that the man was planning to carry out a suicide bombing and was in possession of a car to be used in the attack. They arrested the man and found a letter in which he expressed "frustration over the fate of Brussels and Belgium," the prosecutor's office said. The man also stated that he wanted to die in the act and "become martyr in Brussels," the statement said. He had pledged allegiance to the Islamic State militant group in an internet chat room, it added. Belgian media reports and Belgian prosecutors have said that Islamic State was behind the attacks that killed 30 people and wounded hundreds. Police have repeatedly ramped up security in Brussels. Belgium's foreign intelligence service, the AIVD, told Reuters that an operation is being prepared to capture a further accomplice of the Brussels bombers. "The police were informed about a possible accomplice," agency director Benoit de Keyser told Reuters, declining to give further details. Some of the Brussels bombers lived in Belgium, with one having previously been rejected for asylum. The second man had arrived in the country on a false passport and had lived with his family there for two years. It was not immediately f678ea9f9e
